NAZI AIR RAIDERS PENETRATE SCOTCH DEFENSES AGAIN

Bomb British Naval Base at Scapa Flow; Damage "Iron Duke"

TWICE IN 24 HOURS

"Royal Oak" Was Sent To Bottom While Anchored At Scapa Flow

By Charles A. Smith
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

LONDON, Oct. 17—Nazi air raiders penetrated Scotland defenses for the second time in 24 hours today, bombing the famous British naval base at Scapa Flow, in the Orkney Islands, and damaging the famous battleship, Iron Duke, a veteran of Jutland.

The new air raid of British coastal defenses occurred at 10.30 a. m. Sirens sounded all along England's coast, and in the Firth of Forth, where German air raiders killed fifteen officers and men in an attack yesterday.

Announcement of the new Nazi air invasion was made in Parliament, coincident with disclosure that the battleship Royal Oak, sunk last Sunday with a loss of 800 lives, had been sent to the bottom by a German U-boat at her sheltered anchorage in Scapa Flow.

At least six torpedoes found their mark, authorities disclosed.

One of the raiders was shot down in flames, and another "probably damaged," announced Lord of the Admiralty Winston Churchill.

"An air raid occurred at Scapa Flow at 10.30 a. m. today, carried out by four enemy machines.

"Two bombs fell very near the Iron Duke. There were no casualties."

"The Iron Duke, a 21,000-ton vessel, is now used as a training ship.

"One aircraft was shot down in flames," Churchill continued, "and another was probably damaged."

Coincident with the new air raids, German U-boat warfare has been intensified, Churchill said, but he declared that 20 submarines had been destroyed by Britain, as well as two of the largest and leading ocean undersea-going vessels of the German navy.

"It should be supposed," he said, "that all losses have not been on one side.

"Four U-boats were certainly destroyed on Friday. Of about 62 boats ready for action at the outbreak of war, about one-third have already been sunk or seriously damaged."

National casualties in the Firth of Forth raid yesterday, it was revealed, toalled three officers and 13 men, killed or dead of wounds.

LONDON, Oct. 17—The British battleship, Royal Oak, sent to the bottom by a German submarine, with a loss of approximately 800 lives, was sunk while at her anchor in Scapa Flow, it was announced today.

The records of the meeting were in charge of Mrs. Bonnell, and the treasurer's report presented by Mrs. Robert Leedom. Refreshments followed the meeting.

MRS. STELLA ALFONSI ON TRIAL FOR MURDER

Former Resident of Bristol To Face Battery of 90 Prosecution Witnesses

HUSBAND MURDERED

By International News Service

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17 — Mrs. Stella Alfonsi, comely, dark-haired widow, faced a battery of 90 prosecution witnesses today at opening of her trial for the alleged "arsenic ring" murder of her husband, Ferdinand. Mrs. Alfonsi was formerly a resident of Bristol.

Revelation of the poisoning of Alfonsi last October led to unraveling of the huge poison syndicate which killed as many as 100 persons for their insurance. Herman Petrillo, of Langhorne, is under sentence of death for purportedly engineering issuance of a $2,000 policy taken out on the victim's life without his knowledge.

Native of Bristol Township Dies Sunday in Upland

Walter D. Tomlinson, who was born in Bristol Township, and who for many years resided in Bristol borough, died in Crozer Hospital, Upland, Sunday, following a paralytic stroke on Thursday. He had been residing in Upland during recent years.

The late Mr. Tomlinson, who was 54 years of age, was the husband of the late Abigail Haines Tomlinson. He leaves two sons, W. Douglass Tomlinson and John C. Tomlinson, Sr.; and a grandson, John C. Tomlinson, Jr., Upland; three sisters, Mrs. Louis Townsend, Bristol; Mrs. William King, Edgely; and Mrs. Wesley Blinn, Trenton, N. J.; and two brothers, William and Edmund Tomlinson, Upland.

The deceased was a member of Bristol Council, No. 21, F. P. A. The funeral will be held tomorrow at two p. m., from the late home of the deceased in Upland, with burial in Middletown Presbyterian Churchyard.

Blames "Vengeful Peace" For The Rise of Hitler

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 17 — "Looking back 20 years, a peace of vengeance and not a peace of justice was imposed, and out of the mess came Hitler," declared Dr. Robert C. Clothier, president of Rutgers University, in an address before 500 men and women from Philadelphia and New York at the 42nd annual meeting and harvest festival of National Farm School, Sunday.

"We know there are millions of German people who have had nothing to do with the mess abroad and want peace just as we do here," said Dr. Clothier.

"Theoretically, we have no interest in what is going on abroad. It is my theory that we should preserve our neutrality and continue to wage our own wars here at home against unemployment, hunger, need, disease, corruption in government and loss of a free press, bigotry and war-thinking.

"We have the old faiths and new challenges here in America. One way to make democracy work is a school like this, but the most important thing is the American home, teaching of the truth right there; then come the schools, colleges and spiritual discipline."

At the annual business meeting of the school these active trustees were elected: Dr. Sigmund S. Greenbaum, Judge Theodore Rosen, Nathan J. Snellenberg, Dr. Leon Solis-Cohen, Edwin H. Well, all of Philadelphia, and Edwin Belson, New York City. Honorary trustees named were: Isadore Baylson, Harry Burstein and Elias Nusbaum.

Jobless Payments Drop

Harrisburg, Oct. 17—Jobless benefit payments took a 25% drop during the week ending October 6, it was revealed today by Labor and Industry Secretary Lewis G. Hines.

The unemployment compensation division of the Department issued 58,784 checks, with a value of $646,902, Hines said. The checks marked one of the lowest weekly disbursements this year.

Designates Arbor Day

Harrisburg, Oct. 17—Governor Arthur H. James today designated Monday, October 23 as Arbor Day.

The chief executive urged a statewide observance of the day, through "the extensive planting of trees and shrubbery and by group and community programs stressing the value and importance of trees, forests and birdlife to our well being.

Nazi Warns Great Britain

Berlin, Oct. 17—Great Britain was warned by Nazi Germany to expect "war in earnest" on the sea and in the air today. Informed sources said that Reichsfuehrer Adolph Hitler was now fully involved to pursue sea and air hostilities against Britain "in view of the more than hoped for results already achieved." Action on the sea and in the air "will grow more extensive step by step," it was said.

Photographs taken during the bombing raids over Firth of Forth were rushed to Berlin as the crew of the attacking planes returned to their own bases, there to be decorated by the government.

The Germans are out to prove once and for all to themselves and to the outside world, that any direct hit with a heavy calibre bomb will completely wreck a warship, even if it does not actually sink it.

These photographs will be used to bolster German assertion that the British battle cruiser Hood, the aircraft carrier Ark Royal and a number of cruisers and destroyers were badly damaged by German airplanes.

The Japanese Influence

(By "The Stroller")

Bristolians are treated occasionally these days to the sight of a ricksha.

It is a small model, but a fairly faithful reproduction.

The "coolie" who pulls it is a small lad who is very proud of his vehicle, and the passenger is usually the baby brother.

The ricksha boasts of the traditional pair of shafts, just big enough for "brother" to stand between; and two wheels are located at the rear of the box-like contraption with which the two have such fun.

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

Curator Horace M. Mann, of the Bucks County Historical Society Museum, Doylestown, has announced the gift of one of the rarest translations of mining from former President of the United States Herbert C. Hoover.

The book, which was translated by the ex-Chief Executive and Mrs. Hoover, is a copy of "De Re Metallica" by Georgius Agricola in English.

The book, which was written by one of the greatest mining engineers of the sixteenth century, was translated in 1912 from a Latin first edition which appeared in 1556.

It is a history of mining and considered the greatest piece of work of its kind in 15th and 16th centuries.

The meeting of the Curly Hill Thimble Social was held on Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. William Baum with an attendance of 14.

The flower committee reported having sent flowers to one ill member who is in a hospital. Refreshments were served by the hostess.

The next meeting of the social will be held on Thursday afternoon, November 2nd, at the home of Mrs. George Schmell.

Feasterville Parent-Teacher Association held its second meeting of the season last week, when it was decided to buy a new electric stove to be used in the lunch room. The association hopes to serve soup and cocoa in the near future.

Mr. Neibergall, Trevose, a principal in the Philadelphia schools, was the speaker for the evening. His topic was "An Almanac of Early American Reading."

The local school celebrated Columbus Day during the assembly on Thursday. The pupils are now looking forward to a hobby show to be held in the near future. American education week, Open House and several other events are being planned.

The "Feasterville Crier," the grate school publication, will soon make its first public appearance.

A joint Ladies' Night meeting was held by the Rotary and Kiwanis clubs of Quakertown, Friday evening, when members, with their wives and a few guests, gathered for an evening of fellowship, and were privileged to listen to one of the most remarkable addresses ever given there.

The guest speaker was Harold D. Eide, an Arctic explorer, whose story of adventure is more thrilling than the most imaginative novel. Mr. Eide, who resides at Philmont, N. Y., was accompanied by Mrs. Eide, whom he met and married in Chicago after returning to America, following years of exploration, adventure, gold hunting and fur trading around the top of the world.

Mr. Eide has addressed 500 Rotary Clubs and 480 Kiwanis Clubs. He was born in Norway, 300 miles north of the Arctic Circle, and grew up in a town among seafaring folk and had the famous Arctic explorer, Amundsen, as a next door neighbor.

Leaving high school to join a sealing expedition at the age of 15, he had his first experience of three months of exploration.

Returning to school for the next Winter, he soon joined an expedition to the North Pole, having in three wekes mastered a working knowledge of surveying in order to qualify for the job.

For two years this party explored Spitzbergen Island, where, amid its frozen, icy waters they discovered ocal, marble and petroleum. While there they established a permanent settlement which now numbers a population of 2,000.

BOYS FIND DYNAMITE BENEATH OLD FLOORING

Two Croydon Youngsters Play With 17 "Roman Candles"

WARNED OF ITS DANGER

Boys will be boys!

And there is no disputing that fact. Two Croydon youths, Mark Taylor, 15, and Gordon Harris, 17, cover a wide area in their ramblings. In fact they even sometimes go into another state.

Recently, the two lads rowed across the Delaware river and wandered around through the pines of New Jersey. They came to an old shack near Beverly and here their curiosity found them 17 "Roman candles." The boys were proud of their find and tugged the "Roman candles" back to Pennsylvania and to their homes in Croydon.

Later the youngsters were seen playing with the "Roman candles" and then the curiosity of someone older was aroused. Investigation proved that the "Roman candles" were dynamite.

Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo was called and communicated with the authorities in New Jersey, who are investigating to find out who had all that dynamite and left it in such a careless manner.

The boys when advised of the danger of their find immediately threw it into large holes flooded with water and in this way removed it from the danger of injuring others.

The boys told the authorities that they found the dynamite wrapped in old canvas beneath the flooring of an abandoned shack.

New Jersey police were called and came to Bristol to interview the lads. The police were accompanied back to New Jersey and the boys showed them where they had found the dynamite. Further investigation is being made in New Jersey.

PLAN HEARING ON THE FLOOD CONTROL SURVEY

Scheduled for October 31st at Morrisville Community House

STOCKHAM IS SPONSOR

MORRISVILLE, Oct. 17—A hearing on preliminary flood control examinations and survey of the Delaware River and its tributaries in Morrisville and vicinity, is scheduled for the morning of Tuesday, October 31st, at 10 a. m. This session will be held in the community house.

A bill was sponsored by Assemblyman Thomas B. Stockham, through Charles Gerlach, Pennsylvania Congressman, to make this examination. The bill was given approval on August 11th by Congress, which authorized Army engineers and the Secretary of Agriculture to make the examination, dealing with the elimination of sand bars in the river between the Pennsylvania Railroad bridge and Biles Island.

Many of these bars have been formed, it is felt, because of the channel excavations. They hold ice in times of floes and with the lowering and raising of the tide drop ice on the bars, which freezes fast before the

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

"Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc."

The Effect of Peace

Washington, Oct. 16.

IN this Administration there are politicians who specialize on economic problems and economists who concentrate on politics. Between them they get some pretty weird results. At the moment, both are disturbed not so much over the prospects of war but over the prospects of peace.

—o—

IT would be unjust to say that these men hope the war will continue for another year. That would make them out as callous and horrible, indifferent to the sacrifice of human life and careless as to the rate of civilization. And, of course, they are none of those things. However, while not inhumane, they are exceedingly human, and it is impossible not to recognize that economically and politically, from the standpoint of the New Deal, a quick peace would create a situation not pleasant to deal with. On the other hand, a continuation of war bolsters the Administration in every direction.

—o—

FOR one thing, it wholly diverts public attention from the completeness with which the Roosevelt policies have failed and the general mess in which they had plunged the country. The agricultural program is in a state of collapse, the Federal deficit and debt have gotten out of control, unemployment is undiminished; one-sixth of the nation is receiving some form of Federal largess and the Federal jobholders have risen to almost a million. Altogether it was — and is — a tragic picture which the American people were beginning really to see when the war came.

—o—

ALMOST immediately that picture disappeared. There was a com-

POLICE CO-OPERATION LEADS TO LOOT RECOVERY

Phila. Authorities Go Out and Find 100 Automobile Tires Stolen Here

ALSO RECOVER TRUCK

Co-operation between police authorities of Philadelphia and Bristol has resulted in the recovery of 100 tires and a truck which were stolen from the warehouse of the V & D Tire Company early Friday morning.

The robbery of the V & D warehouse was discovered at about 2.30 Friday morning and the Bristol police were at once notified. A teletype message was dispatched by Chief of Police Linford J. Jones and further description was telephoned to Philadelphia by Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo. At seven o'clock Friday morning the tires and truck were recovered by the Philadelphia police.

The Philadelphia police upon learning of the robbery here in Bristol and upon receipt of word from Chief Jones and Detective Russo at once began a check-up in that city. Their investigation led them to a vacant garage which was raided by Detectives David Malone, John Savage and John O'Brien. In this garage the tires were found.

"We've got your tires," was the message sent to Bristol by the Philadelphia detectives. Yesterday Russo and Police Officer Daniel Ferry went to Philadelphia and identified the stolen loot.

The tires were found in a vacant garage at 5th and Shunk streets and they will be returned to the V & D Company within the next couple of days.

It is such work as this which frustrates the work of thieves and when police departments co-operate in this manner, it is more difficult for the thieves to make a success of their robberies.

Two Social Affairs Are Tendered Miss Smith

Miss Dorothy Scheffey, Monroe street, was hostess on Tuesday evening at a surprise miscellaneous shower in honor of Miss Louise Smith, East Circle. The decorative scheme was pink and blue, and the gifts for Miss Smith were placed in a basket above which hung a pink and blue umbrella.

A social evening was enjoyed and refreshments served to: Misses Elizabeth Nelson, Alberta Brown, Bertha Borchers, Margaret Wilkinson, Catherine Ferry, May Campbell, Mary Ferguson, Violet Keers, Florence McBlaine, Ruth Richardson, Jean Markle, Agnes McCahan, Catherine Johnson, Olive Winslow, Marie Scheffey, Lottie Panek, Mrs. Frank Crohe, Mrs. James Milz, Mrs. Joseph Campbell, Mrs. Mabel Scheffey, and Mrs. Esther Smith.

On Thursday evening, Miss Smith was honored at a miscellaneous shower at the home of Mrs. Joseph Campbell, Green Lane. Eight guests participated.

Methodists Conduct Quarterly Conference Here

Dr. Howard E. Hand, superintendent of the North District of the Phila. Methodist Conference, held a fourth quarterly conference in Bristol Methodist Church last night at which time there were reports of the various church activities submitted.

Dr. Hand gave a very comprehensive picture of the recent merger of the three Methodist denominations and explained numerous phases of the new church government.

GRANT 9 PAROLES, TWO DIVORCES IN BUCKS CO. COURTS

Irvin Hoyer, Trenton Avenue, Granted Divorce From Virginia Hoyer

FREE JESSE DAVIS

Josephine Buccey, Langhorne, Colored Woman, Mother of Five, Is Freed

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 17—President Judge Hiram H. Keller, and Judge Calvin S. Boyer, presiding over the sessions of court here yesterday, granted nine paroles, refused one application for parole, and granted two divorces.

Because he was unable to pay a fine of $150 and costs, totalling approximately $165, John Gillespie, 50, of Southampton, who had been sentenced to not less than 30 days in the county prison, after pleading guilty to selling liquor on Sunday, was advised in the matter by the court. Judge Keller refused a parole, and ordered the case continued, advising Gillespie to sell some furnishings of his taproom in order to raise the fine if necessary.

A divorce was granted to Irvin C. Hoyer, 1906 Trenton avenue, Bristol, from Virginia Hoyer, the charge being desertion. Mary Ann Toombs, Newtown, was granted a divorce from Delbert Toombs, the couple having been wed in 1929.

Walter Urbanek, 48, of Philadelphia, who was sentenced to 30 days in prison on a drunken driving charge, was granted a parole. He was ordered to pay the costs of prosecution at the rate of $5 per month.

UNCLE SAM AS PEACE MAKER

German hints that President Roosevelt would be welcomed as a mediator in the European war place a heavy responsibility on the Chief Executive. If there is any chance that a truce might lead to a permanent and satisfactory peace, the United States would risk its honor before the bar of history if it rejected flatly the role of intercessor.

But there are a number of drawbacks to casual acceptance of such a task. Unless both Great Britain and France evince the same cordiality toward the proposal, President Roosevelt would be placed in a dubious position if he urged a peace parley. By implication, he would be putting the stamp of approval on what Hitler has done, condoning aggression, and intimating that a dictator can be assured of immunity if he strikes hard enough and suddenly enough.

Although at the moment there seems to be an inclination on both sides to mark time, in the hope that carnage can be averted by some international settlement, it may be assumed that the Allies will never talk peace on the terms Hitler has offered. The exact nature of the terms London and Paris would suggest can only be guessed, but it's a fair bet that they would include freedom for both Poles and Czechs.

The passing of time may change the situation, but for the moment President Roosevelt is justified in keeping silent on the German overture. It would be more appropriate for the Allies to present their minimum demands before any third party offered his services in behalf of a compromise. But both the President and the Senate would be derelict in their duty to this nation and to humanity if they closed the door to the possibility of mediation when and if assurance of an open peace parley is given by both sides.

We are faced with conclusive evidence that Germany and the Allies fearful of the consequences of a protracted war. Nevertheless, as long as Hitler insists on keeping the spoils of his aggression, and Britain and France refuse to settle on anything less than an end to Nazism and its unremitting threat to liberty there is a complete impasse.

This situation must be changed in some measure before an offer of mediation on the part of the United States can have any hope of practical benefit.

NEWS BRIEFS FROM SUBURBAN TOWNS

CROYDON

On September 30th at St. Thomas Aquinas Auditorium a Junior Order of Catholic Daughters of America was formed, affiliated with Bristol Court. It is open to any girl from 10 to 18 years. All interested are requested to contact Mrs. Walter Barner, Cedar avenue, or Mrs. George Benneman, Walnut avenue. Meetings are held in the auditorium every Saturday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Schwicker entertained a party of friends and relatives from Kensington, Mayfair, and Croydon on Saturday night.

NEWPORTVILLE

In Sunday School, Sunday morning, Mr. Teal, a missionary, recently returned from the outskirts of Birmingham, Alabama, gave a very interesting talk on the work he carried on there during the summer. John Brambley rendered a trombone solo and the Misses Ruth Erny and Lillian Cameron sang a duet. Then the primary department entered, and grouped on the platform, sang three songs. After which, Rev. Ramaker of New Hope, who was visiting the Sunday School, as Mr. White was preaching in his church, dismissed the school with the benediction.

Mr. and Mrs. George Erny entertained the following guests on Saturday evening: Mr. and Mrs. Albert Erny, Sr., Mr. and Mrs. Albert Erny, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Clark, of Philadelphia, and Mr. and Mrs. Roland Erny, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Davies, of Frankford.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Mattocks and daughter Frances spent the week-end at Niagara Falls, N. Y.

FALLSINGTON

Miss Mae Kelly was a Thursday dinner guest at the home of her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. William Kelly, Morrisville.

Nazi Air Raiders Penetrate Scotch Defenses Again

The announcement was made in the House of Lords. The sinking occurred at 1.30 a. m. on October 14th. The Royal Oak was swinging lazily at her anchor at the time.

Lord Chatfield, Minister for Co-ordination of Defense, could not explain how a submarine got into Scapa Flow. "Entry of the U-boat must be considered a remarkable exploit of professional skill and daring.

"A board of inquiry is now sitting at Scapa Flow.

"It appeared that the U-boat fired two starboard torpedoes at the Royal Oak, of which one hit the bow. A muffled explosion was attributed to internal causes, and the ship's store of inflammables was flooded.

"Twenty minutes later the U-boat fired three of four torpedoes, and these, striking in quick succession, caused the ship to capsize and sink.

"The Royal Oak was lying in the extreme end of the harbor, therefore many officers and men were drowned before rescue could be organized."

"Serious as the disaster is, it does not effect the margin of security of heavy vessels, which remain ample.

"Intensive search of the anchorage yielded no results, and it is clear that after a certain time the harbor can be announced clear, as any U-boats would have to rise to the surface for air or perish.

"All necessary measures are being taken to increase the protection which in the last war proved effectual."

There is no reason at present to suppose, Chatfield said, that the responsible U-boat was destroyed.

The Great Game of Politics

plete change of scenery. Domestic issues were obscured and foreign affairs absorbed public and political attention. To this is added the improvement in business and the prospect of a further increase through war orders from England and France. The combination is marvelous luck for the New Dealers. Better business not only would ease their financial difficulties but tend to erase the record of their mistakes. The inevitable nonpartisanship engendered by the war problems, at least partially, smothers the opposition and the Administration is suddenly relieved of having to defend itself from attack.

—o—

PEACE would change that situation. Among the New Dealers the probably justified feeling exists that peace would cause a sharp business recession. That, they argue, more than anything else would revive the troubles of this Administration, political as well as economic. It would compel the New Dealers to propose another spending program, as that is the only remedy they have left for anything. Congress revolted last year over the spending-lending bill. There is every reason to believe it would revolt again should the effort to put through another be made next session.

—o—

YET the Administration, again on the defensive, would have nothing else to propose. It ran out of white rabbits last time. Spending is the one policy that it had not abandoned. To it the White House still clings, though five years of unrestrained pouring out of Federal funds has been barren of beneficial results. Altogether, it is a curious position in which the New Dealers find themselves, and one not wholly free from pain. As decent men, they cannot, of course, want the war prolonged at the cost of human life and suffering.

—o—

BUT, as politicians, they know perfectly well that peace will bring domestic issues again to the fore. They know further that with the disappearance of the artificial war prosperity, the vulnerability of the New Deal's record will again invite attack. Two things might, perhaps, mitigate the unfavorable political and economic effect—one, if peace came directly through the efforts of Mr. Roosevelt; the other if, despite peace, the armament and preparedness program could be continued.

—o—

BUT, even then, the present advantages of the war psychology would be lost. The plain fact is that Mr. Roosevelt and the New Deal have profited politically by the war. No fault can be found with the President for that. It was automatic and inevitable. But it will be just as automatic and inevitable that peace should wipe out the political profit and restore things to their former condition. The gain will be lost. There is appreciation of this among the more astute of the Presidential aides. They would not, of course, do anything to postpone or prevent the coming of peace if they could, but it is hard to blame them for feeling a little rueful about it.

"KNIGHT ERRANT" by Jack McDonald

CHAPTER XXIII

Heather, rushing into the racing office, was a small tempest in blue.

The secretary sought to pacify the irate Heather by telling her that she must make her complaint to the stewards. But his tact served as oil for her flames. She denounced Slim Maynard as "the meanest sort of horse thief."

White with anger, choking with tears, Heather fled from the office.

"Whew!" gasped the secretary to the men in the office who had heard. "That girl will make it hot for Slim Maynard. I wouldn't want to be in his shoes. She should go after Charlie Bassitt, not poor Slim. I couldn't get a word in. But, say . . . try to argue with a woman!"

Heather, furious, was looking for Slim. Returning to the stable, she found only Knight Errant there, and laid her cheek to his nose in a crisis of pity for them both. There Slim found them.

The sight of Heather, slender and young and tragic, standing with her arms around the satin throat of Knight Errant, sent a thrill through his entire frame.

He had planned to let Heather think that he had claimed Knight Errant for himself, to punish her for her lack of faith. But that touching scene made him decide to tell her the truth.

Their glances battled and each forgot their planned technique.

"I see you kept your eye on my colt," she burst out bitterly.

"I claimed Knight Errant for you, Heather," he answered, and tried to make his words sound impersonal.

"For me?" she gasped incredulously.

"You've misunderstood me, Heather. Knight Errant is yours. I claimed him, to protect him. I've wanted to do this ever since I first warned you against Bassitt."

"But," stammered Heather. "I still don't understand."

Slim's sudden grin was like the flash of sun after an electrical storm.

"I can't understand it either, Heather. I guess maybe it's Knight Errant—his effect on me. That colt just kind of got under my skin."

Slowly, a year too slowly in fact, it dawned upon Heather that Slim was her friend. She said in a small voice that quavered: "What a fool I have been! Slim, I should have known!"

She slipped a pleading hand into his. It was still there when, at Slim's suggestion, Heather went meekly with him to the racing office to have the ownership papers on Knight Errant transferred to Heather Mills.

Slim took Heather to his box that afternoon to watch the races. Rapturously happy over regaining possession of Knight Errant, she sat beside him visioning a glorious path of victory ahead for her colt. Slim was with her only at intervals during the afternoon's race card.

Tomorrow he was to become Edith Clarke Ashleigh's trainer and she was demanding his attention in a series of "conferences" between races.

Three boxes removed, Heather saw Edith, smart and worldly in a white sports outfit that gave her a striking silhouette, and watched her confide in Slim in a manner all too personal—even possessive, Heather thought.

Watching Slim converse so intimately with Edith, Heather suppressed a ripple of what she refused to admit was jealousy. Slim had not helped matters by neglecting to explain that Edith Ashleigh was his new employer.

After the races, Slim invited Heather to return to the city with him in his roadster.

As they drove back from Arlington, she finally was forced to confess that she was almost without funds and had no lodgings. And since she was also hungry, they stopped at a quiet little restaurant to dine and discuss some plans.

"What will we do with Knight Errant now?" Heather asked.

"Just undo everything Bassitt has done," Slim counseled, reluctant to break the news that she must not include him so completely in the plans for her horse.

"I'm trusting in you to bring out the greatness of Knight Errant, Slim. You're the only one in the world I'd ever trust him to now."

"I'm afraid it's too late. I've given a promise. Tomorrow I take over the training of a large stable."

"But surely you could manage one more horse," she entreated. "Particularly Knight Errant."

"I'm afraid she wouldn't like it," Slim explained.

"She?" Heather demanded sharply.

"Mrs. Edith Ashleigh. I'm working for her."

"Oh," Heather said with a despairing inflection. "I've seen her picture in the papers. She likes owning winners, doesn't she?"

Slim lapsed into silence. If it were left to his choice he would cast his lot with Heather's colt ungrudgingly. But he couldn't run out on Matt Biddle and he had given his promise to Edith.

"Perhaps we can work out a plan later," he said slowly.

They left the restaurant, reluctantly, after lingering over their coffee and fruit.

"Where are you taking me, Slim?" Heather asked, out of curiosity and not out of doubt or anxiety.

"To Flo Kane's," Slim said. "You'll like her."

* * * *

"Hi, Flo!" was Slim's intimate greeting a short time later. "This is Heather Mills who owns that black colt, Knight Errant, you've admired so at the track."

The two met with the almost suspicious warmth peculiar to women who have been introduced by a man whom they both mutually admire.

"Sorry for running in on you so late," Slim apologized.

"I'm so glad you came," Flo replied warmly. "I get so sick of my own company."

And turning to Heather, she added:

"Slim is always so busy—just dashes in and out, and I hardly know he's in town."

Excusing herself with "I'll fix you a drink," Flo walked to her kitchenette. Slim followed, leaving Heather for a moment, to explain alone to Flo:

"I've brought another guest for that spare bedroom. She's broke, Flo. Will you take care of her for a few days until I get things straightened out?"

"You know I will, Slim, for you," was Flo's assurance.

* * * *

One night about a week after her arrival in Chicago, Heather went to a night club with Slim, Flo, and Snapper. After the floor show, seeking escape from the rising hilarity of the Saturday night revellers, Slim and Heather strolled along the lake front together.

"Slim, I'm worried," she confided. "I can't go on this way, accepting Flo's generosity and yours. What am I going to do?"

"I've worked out a plan," Slim said thoughtfully. He told her candidly that she must return to California, and with her, Knight Errant, must go.

"Horses are like humans," he said. "They tire of the same routine. Knight Errant has had too much racing. A rest at your farm in the Carmel Valley is what he needs most now."

"But Slim, you forget, I simply haven't any money at all."

Didn't she know there was a check in the racing office for seven hundred dollars, Knight Errant's purse winning from the claiming race?

"But that's yours, Slim, part payment for the money you spent in claiming him. He'll win another race soon and I'll pay you the rest."

"I got that back after I transferred the ownership of Knight Errant must go.

Learning that her financial clouds had lifted, for the present at least, brought only a momentary peace of mind to Heather. Instantly she realized that in leaving Slim to go back to California she would be leaving him to the worldly charm of Edith Ashleigh, his employer.

She knew she had nothing to fear from Flo, but Edith Ashleigh was different. She had qualities admired by a man of Slim's type.

The thought even assailed Heather that perhaps Slim was sending her away to be rid of her so he could turn his attentions to Edith without intrusion.

Heather rebelled.

"I'm going to stay here," she said defiantly.

"You must go home and be patient," Slim declared firmly. "Perhaps in the fall I'll be free."

"Perhaps," scoffed Heather bitterly. "Well, I'll go back to California. But I don't want to go back at all."

He had said, "Perhaps in the fall I'll be free."

Heather tried to find comfort in the words, wondering if, perhaps they held more than one meaning.

Reluctantly—and piqued—Heather left Chicago after a brief meeting with Edith Ashleigh, Slim's employer, in which both sensed "something" in the other not conducive to "love at first sight." They were to meet again.

* * * *

Suffolk, Belmont, Aqueduct, Rockingham. Colorful race tracks, swanky hotels, gay cocktail parties, the excitement of the gaming table.

Gaily around the eastern turf circuit they whirled, Edith and Slim, in the wake of a glorious swath of victory carved out by Comanche, Edith's big brown equine darling.

And as they did so, Edith Ashleigh began to grow on Slim. The habit of her companionship was an easy and pleasant one to fall into.

Comanche had clinched top honors by late summer as the leading purse winner of the country for the year, and already the future book operators had installed him favorite to win the Santa Anita Handicap.

Yet, to one of Slim's spirited imagination, there was missing in Edith's champion the personality of Coronado and Knight Errant which so excited Slim's admiration. A mechanical horse, marvelously gifted with speed and endurance, but totally lacking in the personality and instincts Slim looked for and worshipped in a horse.

"Knight Errant had all these things, and more," Slim often thought by way of comparison. "And I let him slip from my hands."

But only for a time, Slim promised himself. More and more, for many reasons, the urge was turning him back toward California.

With growing frequency, Edith Ashleigh noted, Slim talked of bringing the Ashleigh stable to northern California. But however his thoughts might turn west, Edith's maneuvered to lead them subtly in the way of her own.

"Aren't you enjoying life here?" she would tease, her smile subtle and full of meaning, and Slim would only admit that their stay in Saratoga, in the Adirondack foothills, was one of pure pleasure.

"KNIGHT ERRANT" by Jack McDonald

CHAPTER XXIV

On this warm summer evening Slim and Edith idled over after dinner coffee in her suite at the historic Grand Union, a monument to a now decadent aristocracy and relic of crinoline days.

Through the open windows drifted the buzzing sound of humanity, gathered together at a fever peak of excitement, a sound heard only where men and women gather together to watch horses run.

"I love that sound. I love it in London before Derby night, in Louisville at the opening of Epsom Downs, in Auteuil—Slim, you would adore the excitement of France during the races there! But I think Saratoga gives me more thrills through twenty-four hours of day and night, all the time I'm here, than the Riviera could in a year.

"Saratoga is my favorite track. Which is yours, Slim?"

Slim saw an opening and dove for it.

"My favorite is California. Belmont has the most class—real New York style. Saratoga has the most tradition. Santa Anita the most swank—"

Edith was looking at him, her dark eyes suddenly wide with amused comprehension.

"So you'll take—?"

"Tanforan, and some more coffee," grinned Slim. "Make it a small cup, Edith, we'll have to hurry or be late to the sales. Maybe we'll discover another Knight Errant."

But Edith flushed with displeasure. She was silent. Slim recognized the coolness Edith always showed at the mention of Knight Errant.

"She's jealous — jealous of a horse!" he thought. Women were baffling creatures.

Moments later they were driving down the avenue of elms flanking Saratoga's Broadway, headed for the famous annual Saratoga yearling sales where future War Admirals were to be auctioned off.

As Slim drove along, the vision of Heather, alone with Knight Errant on her Carmel Valley farm, came to him. . . .

Only that afternoon he had received a letter from her, closing with a plea that brought his thoughts of the future to an impasse. She had written:

"I saw your picture, with Edith Ashleigh and Comanche in this month's Turf and Field Gossip.

"You seemed to have a far away look in your eyes. It mocked me—California, Knight Errant, in the fall.' Will October ever come? Sincerely, Heather."

Saratoga's sales were full dress affairs. Here society worshipped for a night at the throne of King Horse on an infield that was a magic carpet of green, bathed with overhead lights and under a canopy of stars.

Diamonds made him blink as his eyes sought the same circle where Man o' War had stood twenty years before, an ugly duckling, bought for a virtual song, later to earn millions for Sam Riddle, his purchaser.

With a mingling of awe and admiration Slim saw Edith drown out, ruthlessly, opponents in the bidding, when some colt caught her expert fancy.

A black yearling was led out and Edith asked Slim's advice.

"He has racy looking legs," he counseled, checking an impulse to add that they reminded him of Knight Errant's. Slim's few words of encouragement were all Edith needed to touch off a wild buying urge. She offered $5,000, opening the bidding. . . .

A strapping chestnut yearling was led into the ring. Bidding on him was rife. But again Edith triumphed, deluging her opposition by raising the ante to $8,000, a price no one else would meet.

"I might name it after you," Edith remarked.

"Don't do it, you'll jinx both me and the horse," Slim laughed.

With a reckless flourish of the pen Edith wrote a check for $114,000, payable to Auctioneer Trantor, who sells 90 per cent of the yearling thoroughbreds in the country.

After her exciting spending orgy Edith wanted relaxation.

"That was work," she sighed. "Let's drive to The Cottage."

Admission to The Cottage was by card, but Edith's was by recognizance. She had been there in other seasons and had she stopped to reflect. . . .

Well, a reflection which was now shining down on her she had paid for, a $60,000 chandelier, which so brilliantly lighted this modernistic gambling house, with its lavender and gold interior.

As they entered, Slim's eyes wandered longingly to the craps table, his weakness. But Edith had a weakness, too. It was roulette.

The croupier at the roulette wheel had seen Edith come in and hurriedly sent for a fresh stack of hundred dollar chips. They always took the limit off when Edith came in to play. There was a standing order to this effect.

"How many horses did we buy tonight?" Edith asked Slim.

"Twenty-one."

"I've a hunch. Twenty-one is my lucky number for this evening."

"I have a hunch, too. California will be lucky for us," Slim injected.

Edith was plainly exasperated.

"Can't we forget California for one night? I want to play."

Slim's grin was infectious. He was a dear, Edith thought, and his shoulders seemed broader than usual in his white evening jacket. Smiling at them, Edith overlooked the purpose of his next words.

"I'll gamble on your gambling tonight, Edith. Be a sport. If you win tonight I'll shut up about the west. If you lose, we ship to California."

Edith laughed excitedly. "That is a gamble, Slim."

She plunged into her gaming with a lightness that contrasted with the strained features of four others at the table. They seemed to be making work out of what Edith enjoyed as play. . . .

One more losing night at the Cottage vexed Edith not at all. She stopped at the closing hour, 4 o'clock. Slim marveled at her airiness as she pulled her summer ermine back around her shoulders and said smilingly:

"I had two strikes against me to start with, Slim. You know, I'm superstitious. I found a $2 bill in my purse this afternoon! And right after that I met a cross-eyed man."

"How much have you dropped?" asked Slim, as she left the cashier's office.

"Forty thousand," smiled Edith.

And only the night before, Slim recalled, she had complained over losing a dollar and thirty-five cents in a friendly bridge game!

But Slim had won—California. He stood smiling down on her.

"How soon do we leave?"

* * * *

Slim stood with Edith up forward on the deck of the ferryboat approaching San Francisco and inhaled great portions of delicious, sweeping, fog-laden air. "Isn't this air great?" he said lustily. "Boy! They should bottle fog like this and sell it for nectar."

Edith shivered and pulled her sables up to the lobes of her ears. "I would say the practical thing to do would be to cut it up in chunks and pack it away in an ice house for next summer," she countered.

"Boy! Is that a sight!" Slim enthused as a rift in the fog revealed San Francisco's skyline. As the boat neared the pier Slim's eyes searched eagerly as if looking for someone in the waiting throng.

"There she is—there's Heather!" he cried, waving back.

"Heather? How did she know—" began Edith, looking at Slim as though she thought this incredible.

"I wired her from Omaha."

"Oh," Edith said with a triple inflection that plainly revealed her displeasure.

So this, thought Edith suddenly, was why Slim was so eager to return to California—for a girl, not a horse.

The ferry docked. The gates swung up and Heather rushed eagerly to greet Slim.

"Oh, Slim, I'm so glad to see you. I knew you'd hurry back," she bubbled excitedly.

And in her joy over Slim's return she was even prepared to greet Edith warmly. But . . .

"How are things on the farm?" Edith inquired, pleasantly enough, to be sure, but with an emphasis on the "farm" that was challenging.

Heather sought to meet Edith's barb, but before she could stammer a retaliatory word a squad of cameramen pounced upon Edith. They were a welcome relief to Slim.

"I want a word with you, young lady," he said, edging Heather behind a small mountain of luggage. But Edith was beckoning.

"Come, Slim," Edith said, much in the manner of a woman speaking to her poodle dog. "You must be in this."

The cameramen raised their eyes at Slim and then exchanged "trade glances" among themselves.

After photographing Edith and Slim, at the former's request, the cameramen whisked Edith to a waiting limousine, where she could be snapped solo.

While Edith posed, Slim listened to Heather's revelations of a reborn Knight Errant, ready to go back and conquer the world after a long rest in the lush pastures of her Carmel Valley farm.

The two were so absorbed in each other that they were not aware Edith had rejoined them.

"Knight Errant? He's looking marvelous. So nice and fat," Heather enthused.

"Fat?" Slim asked, startled. "I'll take a run down to Carmel tomorrow and have a look."

"But that's impossible, Slim," Edith broke in sternly, "with so much to be done at the stables. Comanche will need a jogging up after his long trip, and—" Edith detailed a flock of petty errands, things she never before bothered her head about, and Slim knew she was deliberately intervening to keep him from going to Carmel.

"Some other time, perhaps," she said, smiling at Heather in a patronizing way.

Heather drooped with dismay. Slim patted her on the shoulder.

"Anyway," he comforted Heather, "I'll be down soon."

Plan Hearing On The Flood Control Survey

next high water. This builds up an ice barrier and creates a jam which is only broken by head water which causes floods. The water backs up into homes and stores here, causing much damage.

Assemblyman Stockham contends that if the river is dredged its entire width between the railroad bridge and Biles Island to a depth of six or eight feet below low water, freshets will be eliminated and cause no more damage than they do now below the mouth of Biles Creek. There are no ice freshets in front of Bordentown or Bristol, Assemblyman Stockham says, which cause sufficient raise of water to damage property.

"The peculiar condition that exists between Morrisville and Trenton," Stockham declares, "is due to the fact that tidal reaches of the Delaware River stop here. The water in the river, rushing down from higher ground at the Calhoun Street bridge dumps ice in this pump-like area, where the ebbing tide leaves it on the river bottom without any force to carry it through.

"No ice jams are evident above Morrisville and Trenton until after the jam is formed at this point, and immediately upon release of the barrier in this tidal basin the ice runs off from the upper Delaware without any damage whatsoever."

Removal of the sand bars, it is contended, would do away with all danger of flood in the neighborhood. Assemblyman Stockham has invited the following men to attend the session on October 31st, with a view to eliminating this trouble: Karl King, of Kings Farms; Arthur W. Dover, superintendent of the Port of Trenton; Joseph E. English, Trenton city engineer; Harry H. Lee, Jr., Morrisville Borough engineer; Paul R. Nicholas, president of Morrisville Common Council; W. Paul Starkey, of Starkey Farms; Bernard Walsh, of the Trenton City Commission, and Edward J. Pierson, secretary of the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission.

RECALLS BASEBALL TEAM OF 50 YEARS AGO IN BRISTOL

John Coleman, Patchem Fynn and "Dr." Potts Composed The Battery

HAD ENCLOSED FIELD

Clipping from Canadian Paper Gives Account of Harry Hoeding As Manager

Oftimes the old time baseball fans are heard to speak of an outstanding baseball team, made up entirely of local players, that brought fame and renown to Bristol over 50 years ago. The battery of that famous team consisted of John Coleman and Patchem Flynn, pitchers, and Dr. Potts, catcher. Baseball enthusiasm reached its height about this time and the ball field east of the Mill Pond was enclosed by a high fence. "Uncle Ed" Minster and Jacob Winder managed the team at different times, then there came to Bristol a famous player named "Phenom" Smith, who being placed in charge of the team gave to the sporting activities in Bristol, an impetus that can be felt even to this day.

One of the members of that old baseball team was Harry Hoeding, a young man who resided with his parents on Locust street in the Third Ward. He played third base most of the time but always caught when Patchem Flynn occupied the pitcher's mound. After some years when the club began to disintegrate, Hoeding removed to Canada. So little has been heard from him during the intervening years that few of his old friends knew that he was still alive.

A few days ago a representative of the Courier was handed a clipping from a Canadian newspaper published in Victoria, B. C., which gave an account of Hoeding and his triumphant management of a Canadian baseball team.

The article is as follows:

"Climaxing their home-stretch drive with straight victories over the Cubs in the final play-downs, Manager Hoeding's flashy young Eagles yesterday were crowned Second Division baseball champions for 1939. The feathered tribe administered a 4-2 defeat to the Cubs at Royal Athletic Park, after winning Friday's opening play-off fixture 6-5. The double triumph gave the birdmen possession of the handsome Humphreys Cup symbolic of the championship.

"W. J. Cull, president of the Victoria Baseball Association, in making the presentation of the trophy to Manager Hoeding, drew the attention of the fans and the players to the fact that the Second Division was operated this year for the first time and had been very successful. He congratulated the Eagles on their splendid victory and expressed the hope that they would be on hand next season to defend the silverware.

"Eagles started their drive to the pennant about halfway through the schedule and once they became passengers on the winning van they were hard to stop. They turned aside all opposition in grand style. In the semi-finals of the Humphreys Cup series the birdmen disposed of Oak Bay, while the Cubs eliminated the Navy. Yesterday the feathered tribe wound up a most successful season by taking the pennant and the title."

Mr. Hoeding, although 73 years old, is enjoying good health and still finds pleasure and happiness by participating in that sport, which brought him recognition and fame in his young manhood.

"Phenom" Smith is also alive and well. After leaving Bristol he became a member of the police force of Manchester, New Hampshire, but continued to coach some of the local school teams in baseball and football. About two years ago he was retired from the police force and placed on the pension list. He has relatives in Bristol and visits here occasionally.

COACHES ANDALUSIA

who will send his Diamond team against the St. Ann's A. A. team tomorrow night on the Bristol high school field in the first night game to be played in this section. Diamond is a graduate of Bristol High and Muhlenberg College and formerly coached at Wildwood High School.

DIAMANTI HAS GOOD RECORD AS MANAGER

Under the able guidance of Coach Joe "Dynamite" Diamanti, teams representing Andalusia have won a total of 48 games, lost eight, and tied eight. This is a remarkable record considering the fact that Diamanti has not very much material to choose from, most of his players coming from Cornwells Heights, Andalusia, and other sections in Bensalem Township.

Diamanti will lead his 1939 aggregation of footballers against the St. Ann's A. A. gridsters tomorrow night on the Bristol High School field. This is the first game to be played under the lights in this section and is a Bucks County Conference tilt.

Diamanti, after graduating from Bristol High, entered Muhlenberg, and later accepted a position as coach of Wildwood High School. He held this position for two seasons and turned out wonderful teams, but resigned to head the sporting goods concern that he represents.

In his first year of coaching at Andalusia, in 1934, Joe won four games, lost two and tied three. In 1935, his record was 13 wins, no defeats, and one tie; 1936 saw 10 victories, three defeats; 1937, nine wins, three losses, one tie; 1938, 10 wins, no losses, two deadlocks; 1939, to date, two victories, and one tie.

In his series with St. Ann's, which dates back to five years ago, three of the contests have ended in ties, with each team winning a game. Last season the teams battled scorelessly on a rain-soaked field at Andalusia.

This season, Diamanti has a "green" team which is improving with every game. Sunday, it swamped the West Philadelphia A. C., 34-0, and the previous week beat Wissinoming, 12-0.

In his line-up this season, Diamanti has a very odd feature in football—a one-legged player. He is Bob Neeley, of Frankford. Neeley lost his leg as the result of a football accident eight years ago. But the love of the game did not prevent Neeley from playing for he learned to play the center position and does it well.

On the defense, Neely backs up the line and is in many plays. He carries a mascot with him who runs on the field with him and then comes to the bench carrying the crutches of the player. Neely is also an expert diver and swimmer.

This is the first league contest for Diamond, but the second for St. Ann's, who seem to be having a hard luck season. The "Saints" opened with Disston Scholastics and lost by a field goal, 3-0. Its second contest was with Falls Alumni, and the Saints were beathen by one point, 13-12. Next came Sellersville, and again one point was the difference of a tie game as the score ended 7-6.

One of the largest crowds to ever witness a sporting event in this section is expected to wend its way to the high school field to witness the first night football classic of this vicinity.

WILSON BOWLERS WIN THREE OUT OF 4 GAMES

Last night on the Bristol Bowling Alleys Wilson's beat Badenhausen three out of four games. (It looks like Wilson's new uniforms are giving them luck.) Kendig bowled a high score of 244 in one of the games. This is the highest game bowled in the National League this half. Kondyra again lead the Wilson attack with a high score of 568. Kendig lead the losers with a score of 572.

In the other games bowled "Fleetwings" outclassed Superior Zinc by taking all four points. Bechter lead the Fleetwing team with a high score of 583. Choma lead the losers with a score of 510.

The Auto Boys retained their lead by taking three out of four games from Amoco. Al Moffo lead Amoco with a score of 524. Bailey lead the Auto Boys with a score of 526. The Auto Boys now have a total of 17 wins and three losses.

In the National right now the Auto Boys, Wilson's and Amoco are in the running. The other teams are also giving these teams stiff competition.

P. P. P. took three games from Texaco. Light lead P. P. P. with a score of 560. Hensor bowled 514 for the Texaco Club.

er in the fire house to be in such a condition as to be unsuitable to heat the building.

The committee reported the W. P. A. is willing to install a new heater without expense if it is provided either by the businessmen or the fire company. In view of this fact, the group authorized the committee already appointed to continue to meet in co-operation with the fire company's committee and at the same time gave it power to act in the best interests of the association.

Several bills incurred by the W. P. A. project in making alterations and repairs to the fire house were ordered paid. These repairs had been sanctioned by the business group when it had taken over the sponsorship of the local project.

Plans were also made for the proposed masquerade party to be held at the Weller cabin in Oakford on Thursday evening, October 26. A committee was appointed to make arrangements and to procure music for the occasion. Members of the businessmen's association and their families and friends have been invited to attend.

Under the heading of old business a report was given by Joseph Keating regarding the white line on Langhorne Hill above the railroad. Mr. Keating reported he had been in contact with the State Highway Department and that the white line had been placed.

During the meeting Joseph Keating presented as his guest, Joseph Lippman, who recently became established in South Langhorne as a manufacturer.

Grant 9 Paroles, 2 Divorces In Bucks County Courts

sentence of not less than three months for aggravated assault and battery, was granted a parole by Judge Keller. She has five children, four of them being in care of the county.

A parole was also granted to Jesse Davis, 53, of Bridgewater Road, Croydon. He had served 30 days on a charge of drunken driving. Davis was instructed to pay costs in two monthly installments.

Francisco Berotti, 54, of Beaver Dam Road, Bristol, who had been given a sentence of not less than one month on a drunken driving charge, also received a parole on condition that he remain sober, and surrender his driver's license for one year.

Love Laster, Trenton, N. J., negro, who served 30 days on a charge of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated, was granted a parole, but must pay the costs of the case. Patrick Grace, 40, Philadelphia, a World War veteran, who was sentenced to not less than 30 days on a drunken driving charge, had his parole granted likewise.

Eric Han, 38, of Kellers Church, who was serving time on a forgery charge, was another Bucks Countian to be paroled by the court.

Need More World's Fair Funds

Harrisburg, Oct. 17—Seeking $50,000 operating expenses for 1940, Pennsylvania's World's Fair Commission debated today the question of the Commonwealth's participation in the "World of Tomorrow" when it reopens next Spring for the second year.

State Senator Edward J. Coleman, Democrat, Lackawanna, said the Commission faced the problem of concluding whether to recommend a new appropriation so Pennsylvania could maintain its Independence Hall exhibit when the Fair reopens its gates in the Spring.

Coleman said that the funds would have to be provided by the Legislature, indicating that Governor Arthur H. James would have to include the allocation in a special session call should there be one early in 1940.

Thus, if the Legislature does not meet for any reason before next Spring, the doors of Pennsylvania's World's Fair exhibit will never open again.
